Due to the weather the January book group meeting had to be cancelled, so We will discuss January's book this month. This is a great book! Consider checking out a copy and joining us!

Shelby Van Pelt's Remarkably Bright Creatures is a gentle reminder that sometimes taking a hard look at the past can help uncover a future that once felt impossible. This is an ultimately feel-good, but deceptively sensitive debut about what it feels like to have love taken from you, only to find it again in the most unexpected places. The best part? It's narrated by Marcellus McSquidles, a giant Pacific octopus who not only can think and feel as humans do but also picks locks, squeezes out of his tank at the aquarium to go on late-night snack runs and serves as the town's secret matchmaker.. "Remarkably Bright" is framed as a mystery, relayed in two storylines that eventually converge. The first storyline features "set. In-her-ways" Tova Sullivan, who, at 70 and recently widowed, likes things just so. The second narrative involves down-on-his-luck Cameron, a 30-year-old garage rocker and odd-jobber whose deadbeat mother left him with his aunt in a California trailer park when he was 9 and never returned. The author demonstrates exceptional ability to capture those pivotal times in a life when one knows things are changing and must figure out how to adapt an exploration of friendship, reckoning, and hope.
